

Ethnicity, Race, and Migration

The Program in Ethnicity, Race, and Migration (ER&M) enables students to engage in interdisciplinary and comparative study of forces that have created a multicultural, multiethnic, and multiracial world.

The major emphasizes familiarity with the intellectual traditions and debates surrounding the concepts of indigeneity, ethnicity, nationality, and race; grounding in both the history of migration and its contemporary manifestations; and direct engagement with and knowledge of the culture, structures, and peoples formed by these migrations.

Undergraduate majors in ER&M take courses and pursue research projects that focus on the United States, on other regions of the world, or on global comparisons; and they explore methodologies drawn from many different disciplines across the humanities and social sciences.

Connect With Us

phone 203.432.5116

e-mail erm@yale.edu

website erm.yale.edu

facebook Ethnicity-Race-and-Migration-Yale-University

Degree conferred: B.A.

Prerequisites: None

Degree requirements (12 term courses total):

Required courses

- ER&M 200, Introduction to Ethnicity, Race, and Migration
- ER&M 300, Comparative Ethnic Studies

Distributional requirements

- 6 courses in a student-identified area of concentration (at least 1 must be a methods course)

Senior requirements (choose one option)

- ER&M 491, The Senior Colloquium: Theoretical and Methodological Issues and ER&M 492, The Senior Essay or Project
- senior essay in an upper-level seminar and an additional upper-level seminar

Electives

- 2 elective courses

Additional benefits & opportunities

- advanced language study
- study abroad access to research travel fellowships
- part of the Yale Center for the Study of Race, Indigeneity, and Transnational Migration (RITM)

Yale